UN Warns of E-Waste Catastrophe

The United Nations has issued a stark warning to 1. (customers / consumers / commuters) worldwide. The volume of electronics we are throwing away is creating an 2. (environmental / experimental / accidental) catastrophe. We are disposing of record amounts of "e-waste". The UN defines electronics as anything with a plug or a battery, and often 3. (complains / combines / contains) toxic chemicals and substances, such as lead and mercury. E-waste includes discarded cellphones, refrigerators and e-cigarettes.

The UN Global E-waste Monitor has 4. (reported / repeated / expected) that in 2022, the world generated a mind-blowing 62 million tons of e-waste. Most e-waste comes from developed countries. A lot of it is sent to poorer countries for recycling. 6. The sheer volume of waste is creating a plethora of 7. (wealth / heal / health) problems. Dumped electronics are poisoning rivers and seas.

The UN blamed manufacturers for showing "a lack of duty of care" by failing to accept 9. (responsibility / possibility / creativity) for what happens to their products. It also blamed consumers, saying, "it's just a few clicks" to buy electronics, but "it's far 10. (most / more / much) difficult to dispose of them".
