PART II: WRITING SKILLS

(30 MARKS)

Write an email to a friend to tell him/her about your new mobile phone.

In your email you should discuss:

- what you mostly use your mobile phone for;
- communication through social media;
- a problem such communication may cause.

Your email should be about 150 words.

PART III: READING SKILLS

(30 MARKS)

Read the passage below and answer ALL the questions that follow.

Travel problems and how to deal with them

If you travel for long enough, you'll experience some problems, but every problem has a solution. Here are three common travel problems and ways to avoid them.

Getting lost

Most people have got lost at least once in their life. It can be a horrible feeling — your heart beating faster as the panic starts to rise. With modern technology this is an easy problem to avoid. In the past you'd need a map for each country. Nowadays almost everyone has a smartphone. Before you leave, download the offline map for whichever cities you'll be visiting.

With the offline map on your phone, you can browse even without an internet connection. A word of warning though, this is not a foolproof plan! If your battery dies the plan comes crashing down. A pen and paper may be ancient technology, but they don't require batteries. Write down your destination just in case.

Losing your phone

This is one of the most common travel problems as mobile phones are big business all over the world. Your shiny new iPhone could be a year's worth of wages.

The solution is to use common sense and not wave it around in public. As with all valuables, keep them out of plain sight and, wherever possible, locked in a safe.

Jet lag

While many people use jet lag just to mean tired, it is an actual condition. It's caused when your natural body clock gets out of sync after crossing time zones. Your body still thinks it's one time but the world is operating at a different time.

When I flew to Australia, I was woken at 2:00am by the flight attendant with my dinner. A Thai green curry at 2 o'clock in the morning might sound great after a night of partying, but not when you're stuck on a plane. For the flight staff it was the normal dinner time, but my digestive system didn't agree.

Symptoms of jet lag can include tiredness and insomnia – inability to sleep. There are a few different approaches to getting over it. You can either try and sleep it off, but I prefer exercise. When you get to your destination try and be as active as possible. Go out, walk a lot, get lots of fresh air. If you arrive in the middle of the night and can't walk around, relax. Read a book or something which doesn't involve lots of stimulation.

Not speaking the language

While being unable to speak the local language can cause lots of negative emotions, it can also be the catalyst to greatness.

Body language, sign language, and smiles. They are all powerful ways to communicate. Use every single one of them. If you're afraid of speaking new languages abroad, don't shy away from meeting new people because you don't know words. Use these other forms of communication as an ice-breaker.

Study languages as much as you can before you travel. It's an incredible form of respect that will be appreciated worldwide if you make the effort. Even if it's just a few words or phrases it will help. There are hundreds of apps, guides and language programs you can try.

Running out of money

Unexpected things do happen though. Things break, plans change and emergencies happen. It's impossible to foresee every eventuality.

Before you travel, research the country you're visiting. You want to have an idea of the general cost of living so you can budget properly.

Save as much money as possible, and always try and have an emergency fund which you don't touch. This can be a savings account. It should have enough money in for a return flight.
