TASK 2: Questions 6-9

(4X1=4 marks)

The young people below all want to take part in an unusual competition. On the next page there are descriptions of five unusual competitions. Decide which unusual competition would be the most suitable for the people below.

6. Jamie is on a boating holiday with 4 of his mates from school. They all want to take part in a strange competition and are looking for a team building activity which is also great fun.

7. Alex is a 20-year-old man, physically fit and enthusiastic about sport. He wants to take part in a weird competition that combines a sporting experience and excitement. However, he doesn't want anything that involves danger.

8. Mark wants to take part in a weird competition. He is not the sporty type, however, so he is looking for something which does not require the use of a lot of physical effort.

9. Mathew is a 25-year-old man who has a passion for adventure. He is a gym instructor by profession and in his spare time he enjoys hiking and scuba diving. He is looking for something which combines adventure and excitement.

A. Worm Charming Championship

Worm Charming involves contestants using a small area of grass and different methods to try and make as many worms as possible come out of the ground. It's certainly not a competition for someone who is easily upset by unpleasant sights, but the advantage is that there is no age limit and you don't need to be physically fit to take part.

B. Extreme Ironing Championship

Extreme ironing combines an exciting and dangerous experience with the routine activity of ironing. It involves taking an iron and board to remote locations and ironing a few items of laundry. Some of the craziest Extreme Ironing locations have included: the top of a mountain, while hang gliding, while wakeboarding and even at the bottom of a lake! All participants must be daredevils, between 20-50 and physically fit.

C. Bed Racing Championship

One of the most famous bed races happens in North Yorkshire, each year. The competition sees teams of people race along the streets pushing a bed. The rules state that one team member must lie on the bed. The bed must have 4 wheels and be able to float. This is because the race ends with the "simple" task of getting the bed across a river! So, if you are the athletic type and want to have an enjoyable adventure, register your team today.

D. Cheese Rolling Competition

The Cheese Rolling Championship has been a tradition in England since the fifteenth century. During this strange competition, a 9-kilo Double Gloucester cheese is rolled down Cooper's Hill with competitors chasing behind it. The winner is the first person to reach the bottom of the hill. You do not need to meet any criteria to enter the competition. However, be warned – this isn't a sport for those who are easily frightened. Many people have been injured.

E. World Pancake Racing Championships - Better Master That Flip!

Pancake racing is a part of England's bizarre tradition. In a pancake race, contestants run holding a frying pan with a pancake in it. As they run, they toss the pancake in the air so that it flips and lands back in the pan on the other side. The person who crosses the finishing line first is the winner. If you are looking for a risk-free activity to brighten up your day, join us for some Pancake Day fun!

TASK 3: Questions 10- 14

(5x1=5 marks)

For each question choose the correct answer.

This is What Happened When an Australian City Gave Trees Email Addresses

They provide shade, air to breathe, and an undeniable sense of magnificence. But would you ever write a letter to the tree? And if the answer is yes, what would you say to your favourite tree? Well, the people of Melbourne, Australia took the time to email their thoughts to some of the city's 70,000 Eucalyptus, oaks, and elms. Some people actually took the opportunity to write directly to the trees themselves, to express their love.

Officials in Melbourne were astonished to see that so many people took the time to respond. It all started because city services wanted an easy way for people to report problems with trees, like dangerous branches or storm damage. Planners came up with the idea of assigning each tree its own email address - people could then easily send a local report.

"Many of these trees were dying and there was a danger of losing up to 50% of our beautiful tree population. That would have fundamentally changed the way that Melbourne looked, the way it performed environmentally, the way people felt about it socially and even economically as well," says councillor Arron Wood, who leads on the environment.

It was then that something remarkable happened. The emails began to arrive. Instead of identifying a tree in need of attention and emailing the council to get it done, people in Melbourne began sending personal messages to the trees. City officials were even more astonished to discover that city residents preferred to write trees love letters instead.

"People literally are talking to these trees as if they are people, telling them how much they love them, thanking them for protecting them against the sun, apologising when their dog pees on them in the morning. The majority are really funny ones but there are some which are quite heartfelt emails as well," says Arron Wood.

The response has been extraordinary. Apart from emails from locals, there have been emails from former residents now living abroad, telling the trees how much they miss them.

The council have announced a reforestation programme. They believe it could bring down Melbourne's boiling summer temperatures by four degrees Celsius. As well as cooling its citizens, planting 3,000 new trees a year will help the city to breathe more easily, positively affecting people's wellbeing; individual trees have received emails thanking them for extracting carbon dioxide from the air!
