PART II: WRITING SKILLS

(30 MARKS)

Write an email to a friend about your ideal job.

In your email you should:

- describe the job;
- give two reasons why you like it;
- discuss two skills you need to have in order to get this job.

Write about 150 words.

PART III: READING SKILLS

(30 MARKS)

Read the passage below and answer ALL the questions that follow.

Nine of the Worst Jobs in the World

Work life satisfaction is sometimes overlooked when it comes to finding a job. Many people often end up working just to put food on the table and keep a roof over their heads. This can result in them taking on challenging professions that others often avoid.

If you think your office job is bad, then these professions will help you put your 9-to-5 schedule into perspective. From unfavourable conditions to horrible tasks and challenging work environments to low wages, these are 9 of the worst jobs in the world.

Telemarketer

Telemarketers get paid to make cold calls to the general public in order to sell various products and services. They're a huge annoyance to many people, and receive endless abuse and constant hang-ups as a result. Having to endure this on a daily basis can be quite demoralising. They receive a mediocre salary, too, despite the scope to earn more based on performance.

Cleaner

Cleaners are often mistreated in the workplace and often end up doing horrible tasks. Unfortunately, many in-house cleaners are also taken advantage of by their bosses and are not given fair wages. To get on in this job, you need to have thick skin and be comfortable to say 'no' when needed.

Lorry driver

Besides the fact that lorry driving is one of the most dangerous jobs in the world, it's also one of the worst. It can get quite boring and lonely on the long trips up and down the motorway, and many consider it a dead-end profession with no room for progress and development.

Soldier

This profession can be rewarding as you are working for your country, yet many military personnel have to battle with mental health conditions and other health-related issues. Spending extensive periods of time away from your loved ones can be challenging, let alone having to have your bed and uniform inspected numerous times a day.

Social worker

People who choose a career in social work are often faced with awful and demoralising situations. While it can be a fulfilling job, the circumstances and situations social workers must deal with can be demanding and their mental health could take a toll, particularly when working with orphaned children, victims of abuse and homeless people.

Customer service advisor

Do you know the saying 'don't shoot the messenger'? This is too close to home for customer service advisors. They get angry complaints and deal with abusive customers who are dissatisfied with the company they represent. On the plus side, they can really make a difference when they've helped solve a problem, especially if the company has a great work environment.

Miner

Coal mining is one of the most unloved careers that can greatly affect workers' health. Miners are known to have a considerably short life expectancy as they work in incredibly dusty and toxic environments; they are also at great risk of a gas explosion or a tunnel collapsing.

Promotional mascot

Any list of the worst jobs in the world wouldn't be complete without promotional mascots. Whether it's dressing as a Mickey Mouse character or promoting a new fried chicken restaurant in a giant chicken costume, you have to attract attention – usually ridicule and bullying.

Traffic warden

Traffic wardens are strongly hated amongst the general public; I mean, who likes getting a parking ticket? Their day-to-day lives involve a lot of abuse and shouting, so you will need to have thick skin to be able to do this job. Dennis Sarpong, who works as a traffic warden in London, says: 'You get verbal abuse all the time, but I never take it personally'.
