Interesting facts about Igloos

What is an igloo?

An igloo, also known as an iglu, comes from the Inuit word for 'house' or 'shelter'. It was traditionally associated with Inuits when they went on their hunting trips and they built a temporary house to protect them from the cold.

What is an igloo made of?

Most igloos are still made out of snow, however, it's not the snow that's just settled on the ground as this isn't strong enough. You would need to use snow that has been on the ground longer which is below the soft, powdery new snow. This is much firmer, like the snow you'd use to shape into a snowman or snowball, and you can cut it into large snow blocks to build your igloo.

How do you make an igloo?

An igloo is a simple structure and uses basic materials, however, it can be quite a challenge to make. If made properly, it should be strong enough for a grown adult to stand on it without collapsing!

To make your igloo, you need some tools such as a snow spade, a saw and a shovel plus at least another person to help.

Find your spot in the snow and draw out a circle with your spade. You can then dig down and create snow blocks for your igloo.

Now that your hole is dug and your snow blocks are made, you can start building the walls of your igloo. You will need to make sure you cut a slope all-around your first layer of snow blocks.

Finally, you will need to create a door to the igloo, you can either dig a hole through the wall you've just built or if you want to keep it extra warm inside, dig down and create a tunnel into your igloo.

How long does it take to build an igloo?

An expert igloo builder can build an igloo in about one hour; this is especially helpful when it's starting to get dark and cold outside, and you need somewhere warm to relax. Someone new to building an igloo would take between three to six hours depending on the size of the igloo.

How does an igloo keep you warm?

Firstly, the walls of the igloo will protect you from the wind outside, which can make the temperature feel even colder than it is.

Secondly, the igloo isn't the source of the heat as this comes from everyone's body heat. The snow then works as an insulator and keeps everyone who is inside warm.

How warm can an igloo get?

Did you know you can stay extra warm in an igloo with a fire without it melting? The fire needs to be in the centre of the igloo so it's further away from the walls and a hole is needed in the top of the igloo to allow the smoke to escape.

Will an igloo eventually melt?

If an igloo is occupied for a few days, the internal temperature can rise as a result of everyone's body heat, which will cause the snow to melt a little bit.

Once everyone has left, the melted snow will freeze and turn into ice. This gradual melting and freezing process is a good thing though, as it makes the structure both stronger and warmer!
