A Special Camp

My name is Brian and I'm from England. I've just spent two weeks at a camp in Attica, Greece and I'd like to tell you a bit about it.

I've never been to a camp like this before. Every day we learned something about nature and how to protect it. We had a garden where we grew our own vegetables which we ate every day! We made biscuits that we baked in the sun. We went for hikes in the country and even took a tour of the area around Attica. But for me the best part was learning how to dive because I live far away from the sea. I was also interested in learning about sea creatures – like turtles, squid and jellyfish.

The man who helped make our camp is Jean-Michel Cousteau and he is the son of the famous French explorer Jacques Cousteau. When Jean-Michel was seven years old, his father threw him into the ocean from his ship, Calypso. Jean-Michel was like a fish – he loved the water. He travelled with his father and spent a lot of time learning about the ocean.

Today, Jean-Michel spends his life teaching people about nature and the underwater world. He has made more than 70 films about the ocean.
